Rezek was named Exchangette of the Year by the Poquoson Exchangettes Club.

Also in February, more weather--this time, snow.

Katie Kern's dog, Rusty, locked himself, and Pat Kern's keys, inside the car. Then he unlocked it. Amazing!

City Council met with local business owners in March to talk about whether Poquoson is anti-business. The need for improved communications, both groups agreed, would benefit everyone.

Jenny Forrest and Chris Fuller won first place in the PHS talent show. Tracey Spruill and Sheryl Sonnenberg came in second.

"Poquoson mothers battle drug war on home front," read the headline of the Daily Press on March 17, 1989. Several women were credited with stopping drug sales to middle and high school students.

Steve Kopp and Scott Drumheller each won in weightlifting at the Special Olympics state competition.

The Poquoson Elementary School PTO started recycling aluminum in March. "Community response will factor in the city's decision to investigate if there is enough interest to study the feasibility of a recycling program for the city," said Kerry Knowlton.

More weather. Heavy March rains wreaked havoc on sports schedules.

The Poquoson Rescue Squad staged a successful antique auto show in April. Members hope the show, which raised more than $4,000 will become an annual event.

April, and it was still raining.

Robert Henesey was named Wrestler of the Year by the Daily Press/Times Herald.

The Poquoson Odd Fellows celebrated 100 years of community service.

To help make them feel at home, the Poquoson Island Times started giving out Welcome Packets to new Poquoson residents.

John Benny Graham was named Man of the Year by the Peninsula Sports Club.

Patrick Rollins sold the most candy in support of Little League activities.

In May, the Kiwanis Club served hundreds at its annual Pig Roast.

Ed Prior, Island Times sports writer for five years, retired his pen in June.

The Island Times was selected to compete for Virginia Peninsula Chamber of Commerce small business awards.

The PHS softball team won the district title.

Sixteen athletes in several sports were chosen for York River District All-Stars teams. They were Mike Akers, Dale Williams, Todd Lackey, Becky Bradshaw, Jenny Biggs, Danielle Trombetta, Michelle Finch, Tricia Wissinger, Laurel Cutler, Lauren Thomas, Diane Smith, Ryan Butler, Kevin Weiss, Rick Walker, Eric Umstead and Brian Verstynen.
